To support the Economic Justice Project to improve the lives of low-income families by expanding access to decent pay, health care and safe workplaces. The project will advance this goal by providing legal and technical assistance to grassroots economic and environmental justice coalitions to help them more effectively develop, promote and defend policy initiatives that protect the health and well being of low-income families and the integrity of the environments within which they live and work. The project gives priority to new policy models that can be replicated elsewhere and, ultimately, translated to the national level. Key to its recent work has been protecting the rights of cities and states to enact wage and health care, occupational safety and health, and environmental protection statutes that improve upon federal statutes and regulations.
